Popular Education in Health (EPES – Educación Popular en Salud in Spanish) was founded in 1982 in Chile to bring health care to shantytowns during the grimmest years of the Pinochet dictatorship. Over the past 31 years, EPES has grown from a small emergency-response team to an innovative force in championing health care for the poor through the training and organized participation of the people themselves, especially women.

If you cannot attend but would like to make a tax-deductible contribution, please send a check to:
